

SCHOOL OF ARTS & LETTERS

Texas Wesleyan's School of Arts & Letters gives students hands-on experience and one-on-one instruction from engaged professors with decades of professional experience. Students don't just learn it – they do it. That prepares them for the marketplace and equips them to solve problems like no one else can.

BRAG CORNER

Yep, we're proud of our School of Arts & Letters. Here are a few of our favorite bragging points. We know you'll help us grow this list when you become a Ram.

- The Rambler Media Group, our student newspaper and broadcast channel, placed in the top 10 nationally at the Associated Collegiate Press and Collegiate Media Association Conference in 2017.
- Texas Wesleyan was one of just two universities to receive the prestigious Worthy Award from the Greater Fort Worth chapter of the Public Relations Society of America. Given to recognize examples of "exemplary programs and tactics" in public relations, students in the Public Relations Campaign course under the direction of Mass Communications Chair Kay Colley, were honored.
- The Department of Music's relationship with the Cliburn Foundation provides discounted tickets and opportunities to rub elbows with the best performers in the world. Plus, we're home to a world-renowned Steinway Piano that musicians all over the world come to play.
- The President's Honors Concert puts the highest-achieving music students in front of a packed house to display their musical talents.
- Under the mentorship of Connie Whitt-Lambert, professor of theater, student Dean Phillips had his original play, Fallen Goldfish, selected to be produced in New York, as part of Texas Wesleyan's Play Market competition.
- Religion students complete internships at area churches and religious organizations like the Templeton Trust and First Christian Church of Fort Worth.
